PART 2. BACKGROUND, OVERVIEW AND SCOPE OF REQUIREMENTS

BACKGROUND AND SCOPE

The sampling techniques employed in extracting a representative sample on which to carry out crude oil API, density, sediment and water analysis, the sampling system draws a representative sample proportional to flow rate and batch size, for the duration of discharge / backload operations. A representative oil sample is sent for laboratory analysis. Plainly put, a 1% error can be worth hundreds of thousands of dollars. This makes sampling a serious matter in the measurement world for crude oil sales. Currently SFF uses an inline sampler probe powered by compressed air, Jiskoot Model 210 into a 1067 mm (42 inch) crude oil line, along with a jet mix system upstream of the sampling probe. Having been installed in 1985, the current system has become obsolete and difficult to get spare parts. The rate of sampling is determined by a flow signal sent from the control room via a wire link over a distance of 8 km. This signal is sometimes not reliable and leads to sampling errors. The supplier should make provision for the manual entry of a flow reading.

SCOPE OF WORK

Notes on the scope of work that need to be emphasized:

- It is a turnkey installation
- SFF requests the entire inline sampling system to be replaced.
- The existing sampling system has two samplers sampling crude in both directions of flow, for import and export. Depending on the direction of flow, the sampler downstream of the mixer injector is used.
- The auto-inline sampler should support both OTMS and SFF terminals. This is accomplished by connecting the flowmeter to a common line for both terminals.
- SFF requires a service provider to design, manufacture, install, commission and calibrate an automatic inline mixing and sampling system on the Saldanha Oil Jetty. Samples are to be taken both when importing crude oil and when exporting crude oil. In other words, the mixing and sampling system will have to make provision for sampling in two directions of flow and will be linked to the SCADA system on both terminals. The flow rate measurements determine the frequency of auto sampling via the control room wire link.

The sampling system should comply with the following standards:

- ISO 3171
- API Chapter 8 section 2
- ASTM 4177
- IP Section 2

Technical Requirements

- The sampler must prevail in a marine coastal environment, subject to corrosion conditions similar to offshore conditions.
- All instruments should be certified as explosion protected (Ex).
- The sampler must extract 1 cc samples at a time, evenly spaced over the batch specified according to flowrate. The samples should fit into a corrosion resistant 18 liter canisters (typically).

HSE philosophy

Inherent safety and protection of the environment is a prerequisite from the beginning of the design process. The HSE philosophy must be included in the design premise document, and should include considerations on waste reduction, minimisation of fugitive emissions, ground water pollution prevention, minimisation of manning levels for hazardous processes, hazardous materials handling, early detection systems and specific measures to reduce risks to ALARP levels.

Hazard identification study

A systematic evaluation of all hazards shall be performed in the hazard study. The hazard study is the basis for the area classification drawings and may alter the location of for example buildings, process units on the plot plan or may lead to additional preventive measures (firewalls, other material types etc) being required.
